The evolution of democracy in the Kingdom of Morocco and the role that women have played in that evolution. Democracy is a contested term in Morocco as it is throughout the Muslim world. We examine alternative views of Moroccan democratization and the historical institutional paths of advances and setbacks for women and democracy in Morocco under King Mohamed VI, 1999-2008. We analyze the resources and obstacles for a Moroccan vision of democratization for women within the various political and cultural arenas that contribute to democratization.

Following independence in 1964, Zambians were keenly aware of their international position in a region contested by superpowers. Likewise, they were aware that, as they sought strategies for development, they were making choices embedded in foreign as well as Zambian understandings. This volume traces the impact of the changing international context, specifically the impact of the controversial "Washington Consensus" of the 1980s on the internal decision making in Zambia with specific reference to multiple foreign aid policies impact on Zambian women.

Eve Sandberg, Mechanisms of Domination: Democratization, Political Party Rivalry, and Predominant Party Rule in South Africa This book asks how does the South Africa case confirm or disconfirm theories of political party rivalry and party system evolution from the general comparative party literature? What variables for theory building does the South Africa case offer? How do we move beyond the “fallacy of electoralism” to understand the power dynamics of South Africa’s political parties? The puzzle that the book explains is: How does the governing party of South Africa [the African National Congress (ANC)] continue to expand its political voting base despite dwindling resources with which to meet its population’s needs when facing a highly critical and inclusive electorate? The book identifies five variables by which to understand the ANC’s ability to dominate other South African political parties and maintain itself as a predominant political party. Four chapters completed and edited, final chapter to write.

Reports and Testimonies:

Eve Sandberg, Disability and Special Needs Access to Professional Social Science Academic Conferences. March 28, 2008 undertaken under the auspices of the Feminist Theory and Gender Studies section of the International Studies Association]. I developed and implemented a survey of twelve social science professional organizations. I conducted research on national, state, and local government regulations as well as reports by experts evaluating and critiquing disability regulations and practices. I produced a twenty page report with recommendations for improving the access to professional social science association annual conventions for those with disabilities and special needs. I am working with several of those organizations to write rationales for the parts they hope to adopt in the short term as they plan for other adoption actions in the medium and long term.

Eve Sandberg, Testimony: to the United States House of Representatives Judiciary Committee. Hearing on: Protecting the Right to Vote: Election Deception and Irregularities in Recent Federal Elections, March 07, 2007. 2141 Rayburn House Office. Building, 3:00 P.M. to 7:00 P.M. In addition to presenting oral testimony, I presented a ten page report (single spaced) on the topic above which was entered into the official congressional committee record.
